OUR TOP PICKS ON DISTRESSED INVESTING — PART III

Check out some of our all time favourite books on distressed investing. This time three stories from vastly different corners of the global financial markets. While the first two books provide anecdotal insights, the last one is more technical. Each of them sheds light at a different angle of investment risks.

Why should such books be of interest to investors in general? I think each of them improves our understanding about potential pitfalls and hopefully leads to ask the right questions when doing your due diligence on your investment.

BILLION DOLLAR WHALE

By Tom Wright and Bradley Hope

An incredibly entertaining and at the same time depressing story about the world of offshore finance and large scale corruption. There are plenty of approaches to successfully deceive and then defraud investors. Master fraudster Madoff was all hush hush and used subtle techniques like FOMO (fear of missing out) and playing hard-to-get. But Jho Low's story shows how nothing really beats a proper flashing of wealth and associating yourselves with celebrities. So watch out carefully next time a business counterpart invites you on his yacht or private jet (think Greensill, Windhorst,...). Or how about having some former prime ministers on your board? Too much bling bling means you should better run for the hills.

RICHES AMONG THE RUINS

By Robert P. Smith

Fascinating story of the Indiana Jones of the financial world who spent thirty years traveling all continents while trading high risk securities in the most downtrodden economies. Read about the former collections lawyer from the US pioneered emerging market debt investing back in the 1970s. A man that took risks way beyond his P&L, dodging bullets and bombs in Iraq, and risking his life on the chaotic streets of Nigeria. Learn about negotiating deals in Istanbul and Russia in the most difficult times. One of my favourite stories about off-the-beaten track investing, showing one man's trash may be another man's treasure.

RENDITEPERLEN AUS DEM SCHERBENHAUFEN

By M. Schmidlin, M. Profitlich, M. Daniels, et al.

This one is only available in German. The really catchy title hides highly technical content. The authors discuss their practical experience as distressed bond investors and how they navigated the 2008 financial crisis and the years thereafter. We read about the dynamics of a fire sale, being stronghanded to accept a restructuring proposal, intervening governments and the unprecedented changes in the financial regulatory landscape. The concepts are laid out in case studies on a select number of European banks' Lower Tier 2 and Tier 1 bonds, highlighting various aspects of Basel III and the legal framework for bank restructurings in the EU.
